

ABSTRACT

A device to assist hyperhydrosis therapy is disclosed. The device can comprise a flexible, plastic oval with holes for placement over an area of skin which exhibits excessive sweat secretion. After placement of the device a pen or other mark is inserted through the holes to thereby easily establish a visible grid of where to inject an antihyperhydrotic pharmaceutical, such as a botulinum toxin.